Good hygiene is important to prevent sickness and the cross contamination of bacteria and food products.

Washing your hands frequently will keep you healthy and kill the germs that make you sick and keep you home from work...

20 seconds

...and it allows us to provide consumers with fresh produce that is clean and safe to eat.

The illustration shows a farmer in a yellow shirt and orange cap with dirt on his hands. A speech bubble from a man in a cowboy hat explains the importance of handwashing. A yellow starburst indicates a 20-second duration. A woman in a green shirt is shown washing produce in a sink, with a callout box stating that this practice provides clean, safe food for consumers. Green germs are depicted on the farmer's hands and on the produce.

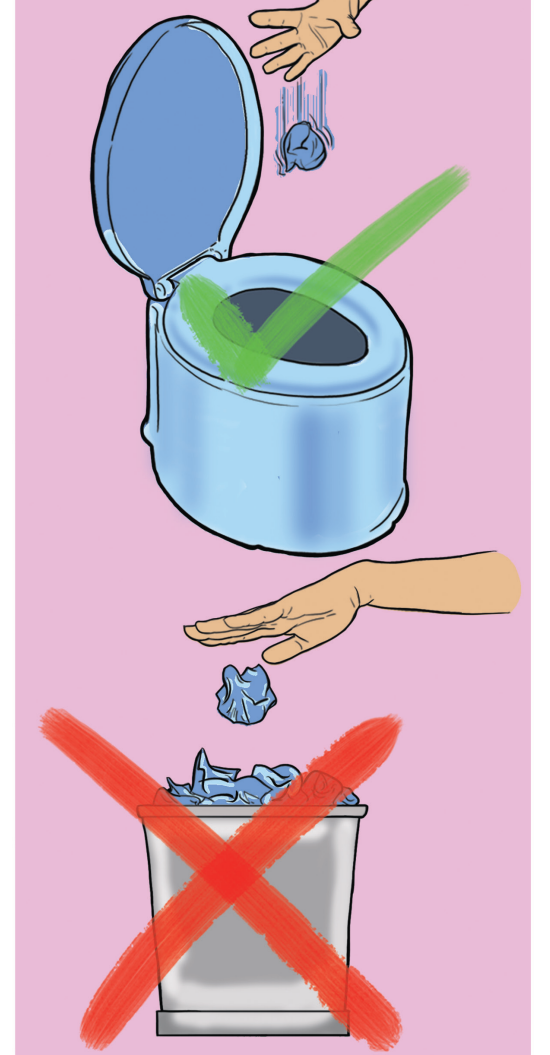

Dry your hands with single use paper towels.

Remember to wash your hands before and after you eat and use the toilet.

Throw away used paper towels.

The illustration depicts a woman washing her hands at a sink, a man in a purple shirt doing the same, and a man in an orange hoodie eating. A hand is shown drying with a blue paper towel, and another hand is shown throwing the used towel into a trash can. A red circle highlights the toilet door handle in the background.

Please throw used toilet paper into the toilet, not into the garbage can.

The illustration shows two scenarios of toilet paper disposal. The top scenario shows a hand dropping a piece of toilet paper into an open toilet, marked with a green checkmark. The bottom scenario shows a hand dropping a piece of toilet paper into a trash can, marked with a red X.
